Which breed is for you?

These five small dog breeds all weigh under 30 pounds, you need to know a little about them to help you know if it is the right dog for you or not.

First up we have the Beagle, this is not a dog for someone that has little time for walks. The dog has lots of energy and will require long energetic walks daily.

This breed is good with children and small pets and is fairly low shedding, however it can be difficult to house train.

Next we have the Boston Terrier, its exercise needs are not as high as the Beagles however it is just as difficult to house train.

Again this breed is good with kids and pets with the main point to mention with this breed is that they make excellent watchdogs.

After the Boston we have the Shiba Inu, this breed of dog shed an incredible amount of fur and are not suited to dog allergy sufferers.

On the plus side they are good with children and pets and are relatively easy to house train if you have the patience and experience for this type of breed.

Next we have the Welsh Terrier, this is not a dog you want to have around small pets like cats, it will chase them and may injure them.

This breed have medium exercise requirements and are good around children and re classed as a low shedding small dog breed.

Last we have the Lhasa Apso, these little dogs are pretty good with children and will shed some fur but not a lot.

This is another small dog breed that could well be problematic when it comes to house training. However, this breed will definitely make you a good little watchdog that's for sure.
