Permissions Plugins

You've probably seen the many different permissions plugins out there for Minecraft. Which one should you choose?

There are a lot of options to choose from, and it can be difficult to decide which plugin is right for your server. We'll go over some of the most popular plugins and what they offer in order to help you make that decision easier.

LuckPerms

Luckperms is the perfect plugin for managing permissions. It's easy to use and has a ton of features that allow users to customize their experience. With so many settings and options, it's perfect for any server, even including Skyblock ones. Even if you're not sure how to use all these features, there are in-game commands that can help guide you through configuring your server. And don't worry about the cost - it's free!

GroupManager

GroupManager is a popular plugin that is free and easy to use, with all the features of a basic permissions plugin. You can create groups, assign ranks to players in the group, and manage individual player permissions within those groups. This allows you to customize what each rank can do without having to edit plugins or add new ones! With GroupManager, you'll be able to make sure that everyone has access only to what they need while still maintaining control over who does what!

Ultra Permissions

Ultra Permissions is one of the less popular plugins, due to its cost, but is somewhat underrated, considering how easy it is to set up. It features a full interface that recommends permissions based on the plugins that are installed and has chat management built-in. It costs $7.50.

Finding and Setting the permission nodes

Finding the Permission Nodes

As a newbie, I had no idea where to find the permission nodes. I quickly found out, after downloading my first plugin (Back when I owned a Factions server) and going on their wiki page for help with how-to's, those are listed right there on the wiki page! So look there first.
