Do Black People Get Lice

The very first thing you need to be familiar with is that people of every race or culture can suffer from this issue, so it is just a rumor that Africans don't get lice or the black individuals of all parts of the world never have this problem. What leads the lice to get developed is the texture of the hairs.

Can African Americans Get Lice

On the other hand, if you don't wash them off properly and regularly, then they are likely to develop the small insects (I mean to say lice). So, it is just a myth that black people don't get lice. Keeping it in mind, many of them start ignoring their hairs' beauty. Not only this but also several of them do not oil the hairs.

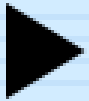

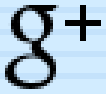

One of the main reasons why Africans and black people of other areas suffer from this problem in less number is because the pores and hair follicles are of black colors. For the lice, these are difficult to recognize. Moreover, the scalps of the black persons are slightly different in characteristics than the white individuals living in Europe or Russia.

Where Do Lice Come From

The lice are tiny insects that are produced on the scalps of the human and mammal hairs. Mostly, they love to live in the dry and hot area so whenever you hairs provide them with such medium, they will start their production. The lice, once developed, are difficult to get rid of. They keep on multiplying even when you have started using multiple ant-scalp shampoos or are getting the hairs medically treated.
