There are a few things that every person should keep in mind before using dietary supplements. For example, dietary supplements are never substitutes for medicines, and these two should never be used in place of each other. Also not combine them and use only one at one time.

The over-the-counter supplements do not need a prescription, but they are never suggested to underage users. No one below 18 years of age should use them. Dietary supplements for children are different and should be used accordingly. Do not use products made for adults' bodies, or the side effects may show up. Also, pregnant and breastfeeding mothers should not use any weight loss supplement. If you suspect your obesity is linked to an underlying condition, get evaluated by a medical expert. Only use a supplement if you truly need it, and avoid unnecessary medication.
