Zinc therapy is a key component of dermatology. This 2014 study in Dermatology research and Practice shows that zinc has been used for centuries as a therapeutic option. Science has shown that zinc can be used to treat a variety of dermatological conditions including acne, rosacea, inflammatory dermatoses, pigmentary disorders, and skin problems. Researchers found ample evidence that zinc supplements, both oral and topical, were important for skin health.

Another study showed that topical zinc could speed up post-operative wound healing. Researchers published the 2020 study in SKIN: The Journal of Cutaneous Medicine. It found that zinc applied to the skin following an operation can speed up healing and decrease the chance of infection.

As a natural skin-tagging product, some people use Sanguinaria Canadensis as an active ingredient in Amarose Skin Tag Removal. The ingredient, also known as bloodroot has been used in traditional medicine for many centuries. Recent science supports the use of bloodroot.

The International Journal of Dermatology published a 2021 study that found that Bloodroot contained multiple bioactive substances that interfere with biological properties. This is why the plant may have medicinal properties. The skin cancer treatment and topical healing of skin may be helped by sanguinarine, a specific ingredient found in bloodroot.
