What is a quality website?

We have now a definition by Google of what is a quality site; it is given by a link at bottom.

These become even more essential since efforts to filter these sites in search results, depending on their quality. Now it is very easy to rank your content and sites through the high quality sites. There are lots of high quality sites over the internet like Forbes, Outlookindia, NYtimes, Benzinga and Hackernoon etc. You can get Guest Post on Outlookindia and as well other high quality websites from the best guest post service online.

Although the quality of a site has always been an issue it took a particular importance in April 2011 with the Panda Update, the change of the Google algorithm to eliminate poor quality pages that even go far in penalizing an entire site if a portion of its content is not well received by users and get no backlinks.

A high quality website will grow over time both in terms of loyal readers but also in terms of search engine trust, which is equivalent to more organic visits.

Google engineers are trying for years to make their algorithms clever enough to identify and rank websites that are of good quality.

It is not an easy task, taking into account that everything has to be decided by a computer program and not a human.

Nevertheless with the introduction of 'Panda' a few years ago, it seems that they are in the right path.
