tonight.

Story can be found here on R-News' website. The bad guy in question was charged with a felony for talking 16 yr old students over instant messenger.

Double check your glass coverage. If you got it - hit the windshield a few times with a rubber mallet over the existing crack to ensure that it's really broken and your insurance will cover it for no cost to you. Otherwise they may just try to repair it instead.

I was rear-ended on 490 twice within several months of each other - neither being my fault. First one I got the damage estimate, took the money and ran (other driver's company paid up). Damage was superficial. 2nd time around I didn't even bother calling the insurance company. Less damage than the first time. Felt it was stupid to make a claim for scratch paint.

In my case - it was the other guy's insurance company. In any event, even my father-in-law who's an insurance agent said it's not a problem. Hell - the 2nd time around, he said to file the claim against the other driver who rear-ended me and use the $$$ to buy a new law tractor.

What the fuck did you go out and buy an ASP baton for? Christ - you want to carry some concealable whoopass with you - hit this website... <http://www.packing.org/state/index.jsp/colorado> fill out the paperwork and get yourself a nice nickel plated S&W .375 magnum...

Anyway... be sure that running around with a baton is A-OK with state law there. Here in NY it'll get you a weapons possession charge unless you're a hip badge-carrying dude like me...

... but since you won't listen to me - look over this chart so if you feel compelled to use someone's head for T-ball practice, you'll know where to hit to injure and lessen your chances of tossin' the salad your new roommate Bubba...

BACKGROUND

The concept of Green, Yellow and Red Target Areas was developed to assist officers in assessing the probability of injury to subjects. When time allows, officers' use of force should take into consideration escalating and de-escalating options based on threat assessment, officer/subject factors and the probable severity of injury.

THE CONCEPT IN ACTION

Green Target Areas are for confrontations where the subject is resisting an officer or another. Yellow Target Areas are for confrontations where the subject is assaulting an officer or another, or when force applied to a Green Target fails to overcome resistance or does not correspond with the threat level. Yellow Targets are areas of the body where force is directed at a joint or an area in close proximity to a prominent Red Target Area and therefore the risk of injury increases. Red Target Areas are for confrontations where the subject is attempting to cause serious bodily injury to an officer or another, or situations where force to lower level target areas fail to overcome the resistance and end the confrontation. Physical force directed at Red Target Areas pose a greater risk of injury to the subject and in certain areas may constitute deadly

MONADNOCK BATON CHART

Green. Yellow. Red. The three colors of a traffic light. Each color having its own meaning for guiding traffic safely through a busy intersection. In the police liability intersection, the Monadnock Color-coded Baton Chart performs a similar function. Understanding the escalation and de-escalation of trauma is as easy as recognizing Green, Yellow and Red.

The Council would support an agency or instructor who finds it necessary to raise a specific target area to a higher color-code classification; for example, the collarbone from a Yellow to a Red Target Area. Any agency or instructor who does not do so must document that action. The Council would not support any change whereby a specific Saw Life of Agony tonight at the Penny Arcade in Rochester. They redid the place - no longer do you have that 2nd level 18" above the floor to hang out on. It's all one flat floor now.

So for $14, two local bands opened, then Candiria and finally Life of Agony. The first opener we missed and the 2nd one sucked ass. Don't know their names, don't care.

Candiria was the real opening band - but they played for only 30 minutes. Hmmm, an 8 hr drive from Brooklyn to play a 1/2 set? OK. They're a good technical band - but an acquired taste like dark beer or hard liquor. Too bad for them they didn't stick around long enough to be appreciated.

By the time LOA came on stage, a whopping 75 people were in attendance. The warring factions of skinheads from Rochester and Buffalo who tore the place apart last time around 7 yrs ago were a no-show and the few skins who did make were too old to cause any problems. Keith Caputo, the singer, looks like he escaped from drug rehab just for the tour and it took him about 2/3rd's of the set to wake up and belt out the tunes like he used to. The sound for the first few songs was really bad - thought the speaker stacks were gonna blow - but that's what happens when you don't bother with a soundcheck prior to the gig and using more power than the speakers could handle. But after putting down 5-6 beers, I didn't care - it was a good time.

Afterwards, we were bullshitting outside with the car stereo cranking a variety of tunes from the CD changer - Nuclear Assault, Testament and Type-O Negative rocked the post-show parking lot (and no one seemed to notice).

But this 33 yr old is definitely out of his element with these shows. Most of the people there tonight were in their late teens / early 20's with a handful of older peeps like me and my friend. Guess I better save my energy for some easy-listening 80's hair metal band reunion tour at some outdoor amphitheatre deal in the "lawnchair" section.

Most of you looking here probably already know me, or visted my other pages and found your way here. Well... I am 33 years old and employed by the Rochester-Genesee Regional Transit Authority where I am the network administrator and jack-of-all-trades IT guy. On top of that I work for the Town of Parma where I wear the following hats: Court Officer (bailiff), Chief of Special Police and Civil Defense Administrator. Born and raised in North Babylon (or try here) on Long Island. I came up to the Rochester area to attend college at SUNY Brockport in 1989, and pretty much stuck around. Wendy and I married on June 30, 2003 and we bought a house in Hamlin, NY in February 2002. I'll start adding more pictures here as things shape up and we're better organized. It's the two of us along with my two cats, Wendy's two cats, and my son (part time). "Where the hell is Hamlin?" is the question I hear from many. Click here and here for maps.

It's called the glorification of the weenie. Girls "like" sissy-assed because they're far easier to manage. Guys like to be weenies, weenie requires absolutely no effort. It's the lazy man's means

Have I mentioned on here that Joseph McCarthy was good friend of my grandparents? They'd have him over for dinner every now and then.

Funny, considering my own political views and what not.

Why doesn't he sign over custody / guardianship of his brain-dead wife to her parents and let them worry about keeping her alive?

I say pull the plug... she's a vegetable.

Given how she got to where she is now (some eating disorder put her in a coma), she has lived longer than she would have by starving herself to death on her own terms while she still had an IQ.

I'm now on the fence with this one. Was listening to a conservative talk radio show on WHAM this morning (the one that replaced Dr. Laura). They're playing audio of the father talking with Veggi and it seemed like she was responding to him (she sounded like the siren on top of a firehouse). They also went on to say that 40% of all persistent vegetative state diagnosis are wrong, and that her husband stopped having her rehabbed after about a year when she was showing some progress.

I'm not saying I'm with Dubya on this one - but I think we give people on death row who are 125% guilty more benefit of the doubt than we are for this one person who's likeliness to a head of lettuce could be in doubt.

On the other hand, I'm a bit annoyed at Dubya for making Veggi a cause when he didn't think twice about anyone on death row when he was the gov'nor of TX... a bit hypocritical... and the death penalty being something that I'm beginning to doubt when you hear stories about convictions being overturned because of DNA evidence they didn't have back in the day. Look at the Scott Peterson thing - not a shred of forensic evidence and the guy's on death row now.

Don't get me wrong - I'm still GOP all the way, but I think we need to step back and think out of the box before rushing to judgement on life or death issues.

I get there - just a couple of shaggy looking kids ahead of me - and a few housewives already being worked on. They have a fag-boy stylist working on some chick. So he's putting goop and shit in her hair and sitting to chat with her for the 10 minutes or however long it takes for it to set in. So what the fuck? I just need a buzz cut. Instead of yentaing it up with her, cut my fucking hair! After 45 min of sitting there, I stormed out of the place and wished he died of AIDS under my breath. Fucking faggots.

Bwa! Awesome!! I'm surprised Kodak gives you guys the ability to walk out of there with those pictures. What do you do - USB flash drive or something?

Hotel Room - $89
Kodak Digital Camera - $400
Leaving nude pictures from that night on the camera you brought back to the store only for them to wind up on the internet? - Priceless!

Jesus RobB... when the hell did you start to go cheap Jew on us?

If you factor in inflation, $156/yr is peanuts compared to what you were shelling out to those fuckwits at Ogden Tel back in the dial-up modem BBS days.

Or do what I do - find an old PC for $50, a cable/DSL router for $30 (or free after rebate somewhere) and host the damn site yourself at home.

Yeah - but what about when you get gas and "pay at the pump"... or order something on the internet or QVC? You can buy $100's worth of high-octane goodness from your local corner Habib Mart with absolutely no scrutiny. Hell - you can stand there and give a line of cars free gas from some poor schmuck's lost/stolen credit card until the bank figures out what's going on and shuts it off.

Pats won. Yay.

The rest of the game sucked ass. Boring, boring, boring. A "safe" halftime with Paul McCartney (very little chance of him whipping out his schlong during "Live and Let Die"). A lame pre-game show with some no-name country chick paving the way for Charlie Daniels (remind me to put him in next year's dead pool). And a generally boring game.

Oh well - as predicted I got good and shitfaced and had a good time. My stone-cold-sober lovely wife was kind enough to drive my happy drunk ass home.

Nah - I find it's more fun to ram my car at ludicrous speed into a minivan with a family of 6 (including an innocent handicapped child and a pregnant mom) on their way home from Saturday night mass and bible study after slamming down 10 shots of straight whiskey chased down with a 6-pack of Molson XXX beer.

If I'm lucky, I'll have an instant death toll of 4 - leaving one mortally wounded who'll hang on for just a few days of agonizing pain while the sole survivor has to live out his life as a quadraplegic with 3rd degree burns over 80% of his body as a result of the firey broadside collision. Yeah! That'll teach them to drive after 2200 hrs!

As for me... may be a few bruises and scrapes from runnig away from the scene of the accident and slipping down an embankment. No big deal.

Double check your glass coverage. If you got it - hit the windshield a few times with a rubber mallet over the existing crack to ensure that it's really braken and your insurance will cover it for no cost to you.

Otherwise they may just try to repair it instead.
