

Dear Shannon Messenger,

As you probably know, a meme is a popular Internet joke generally spread on social media sites such as Tumblr and Instagram that people either see specific humor in or applies to a particular group of people. Fandom-specific memes are often either born from preexisting memes targeted at the general audience of the Internet (or alternatively another well-known fandom such as Harry Potter) which have reached a wide audience or born from seemingly nowhere, as is the case with so many memes.

Your Tumblr presence has dwindled, so you may not have noticed, but the Keeper of the Lost Cities fandom does indeed have many of its own memes. We hope you enjoy this book we made to show you some of our very favorite memes that we hope you find funny, and maybe help you get to know the older side of your fandom.

So, thank you for writing the books that have created so much enjoyment amongst our little community of much obsessed teens and young adults who put too much of our time into fandoms. And without further ado, bring on the memes!

Forever obsessed,
The Glitterfam™

written by @vacker
many moons ago

cue dark lighting and aesthetic presentation slides let's talk about wyvar.

let's start with some basic facts:

1. wyvar is, wyvar was, and wyvar always will be. wyvar is eternal.
2. wyvar is gay as fuck.
3. 'twas i who stumbled upon this rare beautiful gem when all seemed hopeless and heterosexual.
4. meet my co-captain, star. she has, in fact, written a short fanfiction about the very events in this comic. good luck deciding which is the dragon and which is the egg, and better luck yet figuring out which came first.

now that you have acquainted yourself with this beautiful ship, please consider some reasons for adding it to your ever-growing list of otps:

1. wylie and alvar are the only two characters to whom we have been introduced of their age group. of course, when there are only two characters who are even remotely the same age, they always end up together, but please consider that the other options are:
 - a. having a couple girls enter the scene for no reason except being a love interest, a truly terrifying thought
 - b. them staying single for the rest of the series, which, refreshing as it may be, denies us the feels and pain of shipping
 - c. our children's love lives remaining unknown to us (i think not)
 - d. one or both of them dying. need i say more?
2. i think i speak for at least one other person in this fandom when i say that keeper is currently far too straight. we need more lgbt+ representation. i've seen comments on shannon's website talking about diversity in her books, though mostly racial diversity, to which she has replied saying that elves have cultures separate from humans, and elves don't discriminate based on skin color, but acknowledging that she hasn't been perfect (can we please just take a moment to appreciate that? there are probably fewer authors willing to say that they haven't been perfect than authors who have done well in writing diverse characters). it wouldn't be right to put in a gay ship just for the sake of having a gay ship, but this gay ship is cute. you can't have true diversity without including diversity in all relevant categories. for example, sexual orientation would not be relevant in a book/movie with no romance whatsoever (see: big hero 6), but would be in a book like keeper which has somewhat of a romantic focus.

3. person a and person b on opposing sides of the war = many feels. a lot of people shipped sokeefe way before the end of neverseen, which made keefe's betrayal much more heartbreaking and painful, but honestly it's a really good plot concept: someone on the protagonist's side has feelings for someone else they think is on the protagonist's side, and they see it as black and white, good and bad, but then the person they're in love with betrays them and is actually on the other side, and suddenly it's not black and white anymore. when someone you love betrays you, you start making excuses for them, trying to find a way that they could possibly justify what they did and maybe redeem themselves. it's like being in denial. it hasn't been confirmed, but wylie is most likely on the black swan's side of the war. alvar is with the neverseen.
4. they understand each other. in exile, alden, alvar's father, breaks, and i don't remember seeing it, but alvar is definitely mourning. long, long before, prentice, wylie's father, also broke. they're such similar situations. here i make an analogy to another book, a mango shaped space by wendy mass (a great book, by the way), so SPOILER ALERT. when mia's cat, mango, her best friend and one of the most important things in her life, dies one day, she is devastated. at one point she tells her best (human) friend, who had lost her mother years previously, that she doesn't know how it feels. her friend is confused and hurt. later, at school, she is talking to another friend/possible love interest and almost says the same thing, but remembers that he had a dog who passed away, and that he does truly understand what she's feeling. END SPOILER ALERT similarly, in exile, grady and edaline might have understand how it feels to lose someone dear, but wylie is the only one (besides alvar's siblings) who understands how it feels to lose a father like that, still alive, but no longer sane, no way to reach him or help him. whoever wylie may blame for what happened to prentice, and whatever he believes about how sophie can fix things, he understands what alvar is feeling.
5. the beautifully complex dynamic between two people when they understood each other's pain for what seemed like a fleeting moment but then some miracle happens to one of them, but not the other. here i make another analogy, this time to the show once upon a time, at the end of season 5, so, once again, SPOILER ALERT. all season emma has been doing everything in her power (and that's a lot of power) to save killian, to keep him alive. she literally goes to the underworld to get him back. then, in the end, there's no way to save him anymore, and emma has to return to storybrooke without him. as they try to beat hades, robin's soul is obliterated. the next calm moment they have to grieve, they feel each other's pain of having loved someone so deeply and having been willing to do anything for them, only to have that crushed, with nothing anyone can do about it - emma has already tried everything; regina's boyfriend was literally deleted from existence. then zeus decides to do what gods do best: do something really nice for one or two people they like, not caring about how much it fucks with everyone else. he brings killian back to life. while emma has a moment of pure joy, regina has yet another bucket of emotion dumped on her head. END SPOILER ALERT assuming wylie and alvar know each other during exile, wylie must be feeling something like what regina feels. he's angry, angry at people who don't deserve it. he's angry at alvar even though he had nothing to do with alden's healing, angry at sophie for healing alden first even though it was the council's orders, angry at the council for ordering alden to be healed instead of prentice even though it wouldn't make sense to heal a prisoner in exile before an "innocent" noble (an "innocent" noble who broke from guilt), angry at alden for doing this to prentice even though he, like sophie, had no choice, angry at the black swan for not immediately snatching up sophie and dragging her down into exile to fix prentice, angry at fate, the world, whatever caused all this to happen to him.

6. unless the matchmaking office takes sexuality into account, they'd probably be a bad match, and they'd probably stay together despite that, and they'd get married, if only as a "fuck you" to elvin society. then they'd join the nobility, get quality jobs, live happily for a while, find themselves bored of everyday life and find a way to somehow sue the council or whatever the equivalent of that is. who doesn't want to see any of that happening? (i'd watch any of my notps go through all that very willingly and probably come out of it shipping them really hard tbh.)

and now for an explanation of this comic that i have drawn:

1. it takes place in exile, during which, as i have explained, alden is broken and prentice is broken and they get each other.
2. in the first panel, alvar, angry, tears coming out of his eyes, stands at alden's tree, saying "damnit, dad! you said there was no reason to worry."
3. in the second, wylie, standing by cyrah's tree, notices alvar, and, being a kind cinnamon roll, calls out to him: "al?"
4. next, wylie's hand on alvar's shoulder is depicted, because wylie is a wonderful elf and wishes to comfort his evil boyfriend.
5. in the next two, they make eye contact. a million words pass between them. (it's really hard to get emotion into just the eyes like seriously wow)
6. "i know," says wylie. a tear escapes alvar's eye.
7. with absolutely no context whatsoever and nothing to determine the status of their current relationship in any way, they kiss. well, two awkwardly drawn anime people who bear a strange resemblance to them kiss in the exact same spot.
8. i made the sky gray because blue was too happy and i had no other good sky colors, also pathetic fallacy (i was drawing this and i just could not remember what the thing where the weather reflects the mood is called ...)

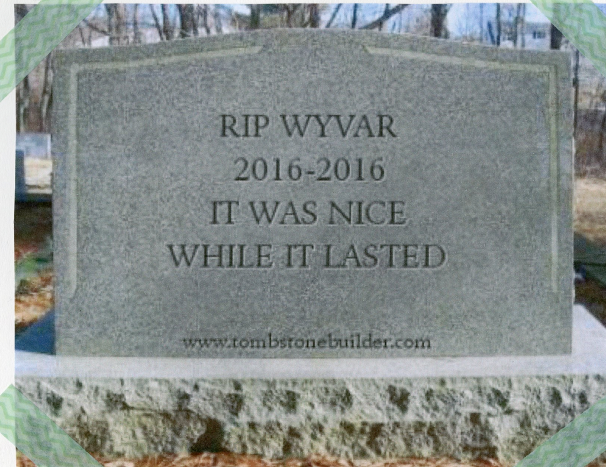

and thus concludes my presentation on wyvar, on which i unintentionally spent two hours! tl;dr: wyvar is otp.

alas, it was not to last... →

After the release of Lodestar, a bit of discourse sprang up over the morality of Wyvar, and the ship was effectively killed like Kenric. We're still debating if Alvar helped Wylie escape—but we do get why you winced when we screamed "WYVAR" at the Lodestar launch party.

Talking about
lack of presence and appreciation in this fandom

WHERE IN THE WORLD IS Dex Dizznee?

The day that the Nightfall cover was revealed, the Tumblr fandom decided to protest Dex's exclusion from the cover by Photoshopping the Nightfall cover. This day went down in KOTLC history as the Dexvolution.

Dexter Alvin Dizznee will never be featured on the cover.

We don't know that, you say. We still have one book left, you say. Stop being a world-weary cynic convinced that your fave is doomed to die, you say.

Well, who was the person who's been saying Linh and Keefe were going to be the ones on the Nightfall cover since November? I mean, I'm not going to say I called it...

...but I called it.

But before I go into why Dex will never make it on the cover, I'm going to explain why he deserves to be on the cover.

1. He has not been featured on the cover since Book 1. In-universe, Book 1 took place around a year and a half before Lodestar. Dex has gone from being twelve years old to being fourteen—obviously, his appearance has changed.
2. Adding onto that, every main character has been featured on the covers of the three most recent books except for Dex. We have seen the 'older version' of every character except Dex.
3. Dex is the only main character whose appearance has changed significantly over the course of the series. (No, Iggy doesn't count.) In Lodestar, Biana gives Dex a makeover. This scene is written in a way that implies a turning point for Dex, and therefore I believe that this will be his 'look' for the rest of the series. To revert back to his original hairstyle would be counterproductive in regard to the symbolism of the scene. So Dex's appearance has been significantly changed, and we need to see his new look on a cover.
4. Dex and Biana are the only members of the original five main characters who have only been featured on the cover once. Sophie is on the cover of every book, Fitz has been on it twice, and Keefe has been on the cover three times. As the third member of KEEPER's Heterosexual™ love square, Dex should be on the cover just as many times as Fitz and Keefe.
5. Lastly, there is a nonzero chance that Dex is going to be killed off in Nightfall or Book 7. I might go into more detail about this in another post. But in short, Dex's life is legitimately in jeopardy, and to send him to his grave without featuring him on the cover would be blasphemy.

That was by no means an exhaustive list, but it covered most of the main points. Now, I'm going to talk about why he is not going to make it on the cover. Warning: extreme salt ahead.

1. The fandom has convinced Shannon that we hate him. Instagram—or should I call it Keefestagram—is definitely a big part of the problem. It's a vicious cycle. The less that fans support Dex, the less page time Shannon will give him, his character becomes less appealing, and fewer fans support him.
2. He never gets big parts in the climax. He's always in the background, finding information or jabbing sticks into contraptions. He never gets a badass moment because his talent doesn't allow for that.
3. Practically speaking, designing new characters is hard. We can see that even looking at the Nightfall cover. Keefe's face looks exactly the same as his face in Neverseen and Exile. He even has a similar expression. I'm not saying it's laziness; I'm just saying that making new characters is hard, and Jason Chan has to make these covers quickly.
4. Fitz is going to be on the Book 7 cover because Shannon doesn't want to make it obvious whether Sophitz or Sokeefe is going to sail until the very end. Keefe has been on the cover three times, and Fitz has only been on the cover twice. He has to be on the Book 7 cover so he and Keefe can be featured the same amount of times. And if Fitz is on the cover, Dex can't be on the cover, because God forbid there's anything in these books that might give fans Gay™ ideas. Even if you look at the covers with two female characters (Neverseen and Nightfall), Sophie and the other female character are never next to each other. In Neverseen, Sophie and Biana are separated by Keefe. In Nightfall, Linh is in the background while Sophie is in the foreground.
5. And lastly again, Dex is going to die before he gets a chance to be on the cover.

TL;DR Dex is never going to be on the cover and I'm bitter af about it.
