You should consider the following tips:

Call the police to file a report at the scene of the accident. You should provide the police with as much detailed information as possible about the negligent party and the car they were driving.

Take note of which direction the negligent party fled the scene of the accident. You should tell the police and keep a note for your own files.

Get detailed information of any individuals that may have witnessed the hit and run accident. You will need to provide this important information to your New York personal injury lawyer.

Take note of your medical condition and do not delay seeking medical attention. Symptoms of certain injuries may not become apparent until days or even weeks following your accident.
