Mr. Dann's company, ConeTech, pioneered the whole process of alcohol adjustment in wine using a version for this Australian technology known just as the Spinning Cone Column. Today this technology serves approximately 600 wineries. "Basically, this is a process of spinning a thin film of wine across cones and capturing first all the delicate volatile aromas and any alcohol vapors at the top of a vacuum chamber. Through precise calibrations we can regulate about the amount of alcohol peeled off any wine," said Dann. We can exactly match the chemical profile of this pre-adjusted wine delivered to us along with the wine returned to the winery." Tests have proven that there isn't difference in chemistry, aromas and taste of the wine after treatment - except, of course, for the alcohol advantage.

About various other week I am going to wine country and San Francisco to make sales calls and whenever possible I go to the Ferry Plaza Wine Merchant in the late afternoon locate feel for what's new in wine bottles. Because they have a large selection of wines from the glass I purchase to test. Recently I tasted (by the way they aren't cheap) a Zinfandel with some cheeses and bread and intensely enjoyed the flavors in the wine. glenfiddich 15 was so impressed with the Zin, I purchased a bottle of the Zin onto the spot, aside from the cheese and bread and went for you to the hotel to continue with the wonderful will taste. Guess what? It was not for replicated, even within a few hours. What happened?

For wine tasting events, choose small, inexpensive goggles. Wineglasses just for tasting wine to the wine tasting party don't need to be as pretty or expensive. Indeed, since you will often need many and some are liable to be broken by guests, I prefer cheaper ones for such occasions. Smaller tasting glasses are optimal, particularly if many wines will be served at one time and during the period of the evening. They are easier to clean and you can fit more in front of each guest revealed. Also, tasting pours are probably smaller making sure each wine can cause it to become around just about every guest a website guest can drink more wines with out too tipsy. A small pour in a very large glass can get lost and be hard to gauge how much has been consumed.
