

Minecraft Map Of WoW Stormwind Has Blizzard Impressed

There are plenty of Minecraft maps representing blocky versions of your favourite games, from Elden Ring to Mario Kart. One of the most impressive recreations that we have seen is still in development. It's about World of Warcraft. In fact, Blizzard has complimented it.

Yunatahel (a YouTuber who does a lot of World of Warcraft video) is also currently creating Stormwind from Minecraft's MMO game. Stormwind, also known by Stormwing City, the capital of the Stormwind region and the largest human settlement in Azeroth, is also known as Stormwing City. It was named because of the sudden squalls caused by a leyline around the city.

While the Minecraft build is still in development, the video shows off the amazing level of detail - and the love for the source material. Each building has a stunning tiled roof. The cobbled walkways seem almost real. The lighting effects add an extra dimension to the area. The area is home of a number of shops, waterways, or churches. We are eager to explore it.

It's so impressive that even the official Blizzard account for Warcraft in French has complimented it, saying that it "can't wait to see the final result."

On est impatients de voir le resultat final - bravo! <https://t.co/NHv2iJIKmN>

We don't know if the map will be released at this time, but we recommend following Yunatahel on Twitter and YouTube to see if there's any interest in exploring the area once it's done. We'd also wager it wouldn't be too long until modders could add in quests too, but we're getting ahead of ourselves a little.

Another update: You can now live your most Miniony lifestyle thanks to a new Minecraft DLC. Are they more or less annoying than the Rabbids? We lose regardless of who wins.
