

By itself there isn't much one can say about Debt Consolidation. It's a service provided by companies in order to "consolidate", or put together credit card debt from all of the existing credit cards into one account with different rules.

But you can improvise and think of specific things people search for, for example "How to stop using credit or credit cards". If you start typing these sentences into Google, you will see that people legitimately are looking for this type of information.

What about educational websites? Most of educational website can write your essay, but there is a little amount of services where students can buy a powerpoint presentation or another kind of works, that you can find at research paper writing services.

If this is something you can do, if you can write about finance really well and be able to be extremely creative with choosing your topics and caring about your content, then there is no reason for why you shouldn't do it.

But many people simply choose the subject because it can potentially make lots of money and then get frustrated when they can't find anything to say about that subject.
