

Do you wish there was a complete list of artwork blogs you could use as a resource to help you become a better artist? Well, it is finally here -- right before your eyes! Hours and hours of research went into finding the top art blogs that are featured in this list of the internet. But these are not just any ol' art sites that are random.

Specifically, this exclusive list shows

☐ Inspire your creativity and creativity

☐ Boost your abilities and talent

Below... we'll provide you the inside scoop on what every art blog is all about and why it's unique. We'll further explain the interesting topics and kinds . Finally, to get you acquainted with every blog, we'll show you publications and a few recommended articles that you'll definitely want to explore.

Ready to find your new favorite art website?

Art Blogs Which Will Inspire Your Imagination And Creativity

1. Hi-Fructose

Hi-Fructose is an art blog that features new contemporary artworks that don't adhere to any specific genre or trend.

Topics include original paintings, drawings, charcoals, glassworks, sculptures, different styles of prints, and much more.

Every blog post includes a different artist and highlights one of the latest contributions, some of which are on display at museums, exhibitions, or other places. When you learn about the featured artwork of the blog post and how it was designed, you're then given the opportunity.

Typically, the blog articles will feature several elements of the artist's history and include a couple of quotes from the artist which gives you a glimpse into their worldview and reasons for producing the artwork.

When it's clever and original artwork you are after, you impress and will truly inspire.

Check out these books from Hi-Fructose:

☐ The Evolving Paintings of Andrew Salgado

☐ The Human-Filled Clocks of Maarten Baas

2. BOOOOOOOM

BOOOOOOOM is an art blog that features artists' work.

Topics focus on illustrations and photographs.

Most the articles put the spotlight on an artist's selected artwork. While some of the posts include interviews about the artist work only, some posts dive into the artist's background so readers can see the personality behind the artwork that is featured.

1 section of the blog is designated for displaying the art filed and created by the BOOOOOOOM community, which gives an ever-evolving lineup of art to blog readers to feast your eyes upon.

If that is not enough to keep you browsing for hours, you can watch tons of captivating artwork a special section of this blog, on BOOOOOOOM TV.

All in all, the BOOOOOOOM team does a terrific job at covering artwork from lesser-known and emerging artists who are oozing with talent, particularly in the art cinemas.

Check out these books from BOOOOOOOM:

☐ Reflect by Illustrator Evan M Cohen

☐ Artist Spotlight: Lauren YS

☐ Mount Defiance: New Neighbourhood

3. virtosuart.com

Virtosuart.com is an art blog that masterfully blends art, culture, and knowledge.

Topics include projects, paintings, photography, graffiti, street art, as well as installations.

The blog usually offers an artist work of art which is to be shown in an exhibition. A short interview, as well as images of the artist work, accompany each blog post, too.

The accent that the virtosuart.com blog puts on promoting the artist's job pre-exhibition is what really makes them stand out since it provides readers the chance to meet the artist and see their artwork up close in person at a live event.

Overall, virtosuart.com is a different strain of art blog that chooses to promote inspiring new works of art and observe an artist's success.

Take a look at these publications from virtosuart.com:

☐ <https://www.virtosuart.com/blog/what-is-canvas-art>

☐ <https://www.virtosuart.com/blog/the-world-biggest-ever-oil-painting-commission>

☐ <https://www.virtosuart.com/blog/abstract-paintings-depicting-great-world-personalities>

4. Commarts

Commarts is an art blog whose mission is to inspire other communicators and artists.

Blog posts commonly highlight book reviews, exhibits, and featured artists. The blog provides artists to interviews and a collection of well-written column pieces. You can discover many other reads by finding them in the site's 'Gallery' section.

To get the complete story on an artist's featured work, Commarts lets you scan at the base of some of the blog posts through a slideshow of the artist art projects. The delicate and simple interaction is a great touch.

Web designers will notably fall in love with the "Webpicks" section of this blog which illuminates the background, production information, challenges, and specialized features of producing beautifully designed websites handpicked by Commarts.

While their free content is enjoyable their premium content represents a goldmine of art that is curated that'll ignite the imagination of any artist. The premium content provides readers with an invaluable source of exclusive articles, media access to over 18,000 award-winning images and videos, in addition to a monumental list of over 21,000 artist profiles and their work.

Impressive.

Check out these publications from Commarts:

□ Webpicks: Decentraland

□ Pakistan, Bikaner and Bali Travel Posters

5. Colossal

Colossal is an art blog design, that blends art, and visual culture to present the works of emerging and established artists from around the world.

Topics include arts, crafts, design, animation, photography, street art, illustration, and architecture.

One specific artwork is featured by the Colossal blog before diving into the details around the artist education of the arts. After you learn a little bit about the artist's background, the blog article dives deeper into Colossal's own description and thoughts regarding the work before showing you more of the artist endeavors.

There's a lot of stuff to see and read. The Colossal blog is famed for its high quality colossal-sized pictures of layouts and artwork. They hog the spotlight in many articles, but in a very good way.

Check out these publications from Colossal:

□ Atmospheric Collages by Art Duo 'Frank Moth' Combine Elements of the Past and Future

□ Japanese Monster Figurines Apologize To Their Destruction at Press Conference Podiums

□ Ceramic Dishes Drawn as Rippling Pools of Culture by Brendan Lee Satish Tang

6. Azure Magazine

Azure Magazine is an art blog with a distinct identity as it covers global art affairs but also specializes in reporting the Canadian art scene.

Topics include contemporary design and architecture.

Blog posts are about business brands, museums, exhibitions, and artists make use of art, news stories. There is also a collection of interviews with award-winning and emerging artists.

Other articles will keep you up-to-date on the consequences as well as Canadian art events that artists create in the North American country.

The best part of the Azure Magazine blog is that's it written and always seems to find a way to unearth the most intriguing stories going on in the art world.

You want to feel inspired by some of the world's most intriguing architecture designs or if you're a fan of blogs that read as easy, you've got to stop by the Azure Magazine blog.

In case you have not discovered it yet, it's a hidden gem.

Check out these publications from Azure Magazine:

□ 10 Buildings to See in 2019

□ A Big Hit in Europe, Sweden's Solar Egg Lands in North America

7. Design You Trust

Design You Trust is an art blog which features a combination of random artworks, many of which are derived from news stories that are underground and popular.

Topics include technology, architecture, photography, animals, design, and travel.

Each post features blurb and an interesting artwork that will inspire and instruct you.

While Layout You Trust definitely hits the mark on being informative, several of the posts include a great deal of humor, too (whether intentional or not)!

Irrespective of what's new on the hourly-updated art blog by Design You Trust, they have mastered the art of making it interesting to read about art.

Check out these publications from Design You Trust:

□ An Artist Imagines If Popular Sodas Were Cartoon Character

□ Hippie Van Of The 1960s: Amazing Photographs That Capture People With Their Vintage VW Buses

Art Blogs That Will Boost Your Skills And Talent

8. Artists Network

Artists Network is an art blog whose mission is teach you how you can create incredible works of art and to inspire your creative side.

Topics of the blog include a wide assortment of artwork tutorials taught by professional artists. You'll gather the majority of your information from videos and useful articles, in addition to live art demos for beginner and advanced artists.

The Artists Network blog features also and over 700 video workshops, on-demand art courses, so they can be watched by you at your leisure improve upon your existing skill set and to learn something. Art lessons and the articles are excellent because they show you what also tell you what tools to use and to do step-by-step. The articles include lots of movie or images to enhance your understanding, also. It's absolutely great.

Much of the information is classified by media (watercolors, pastels, and oil just to mention a couple ), so it's easy for you to navigate to the information that you would like to learn about most.

You've always wanted to try learning a new technique or if you've got the desire, the Artists Network blog <https://www.virtosuart.com/blog/oil-painting-depicts-winston-churchill> has you covered and it is highly suggested.

Check out these publications from Artists Network:

9. CreativeBloq

CreativeBloq is an art site which helps by keeping them up-to-date with the latest trends, techniques, and technology associated with art, artists improve their skills.

Topics include typography, graphic design, illustration, artwork, web design, and much more.

CreativeBloq uses their ability to publish a healthy mixture of detailed articles which are informative, instructive, and inspiring Although some art blogs focus on showing you lots of eye candy artwork and visuals. The complete package.

CreativeBloq's news stories shed light on what's happening in the art industry and sometimes promote products for artists to use. Their easy-to-consume, step-by-step art tutorials show lots of new techniques for artists to try (with and without the use of software).

Overall, the CreativeBloq blog is a remarkably useful resource and is a for tech-savvy artists that are interested in learning how to use software to make digital art.

Check out these publications from CreativeBloq:

□ Create a Quick and Anatomically Correct Sketch

Art Blogs That Will Advance & Accelerate Your Artist Career

11. Empty Easel

Empty Easel is an art blog that is full of resources and tips for artists who want to sell art online and offline to progress art career or their hobby.

Topics include art business advice and art advice in general. The blog is also a vault where you can find a great deal of drawing lessons and free painting tutorials , too. There is also an entire section of the blog that'll teach you a whole lot of Photoshop tricks if you work with digital art.

To change things up and keep things exciting, Empty Easel consistently features art on their blog that is submitted by their fanbase, which gives a boost in exposure to the artist.

The strength behind Easel is that artists in fact write its blog. So if you would like to learn useful and effective artist tips which have been tested, tried, and used by real artists -- Empty Easel is a wonderful reservoir of information that'll transform you into a profitable artist.

Check out these publications from Easel:

□ How to Sell Art Directly From The Studio

□ 8 Ways to Protect Your Artwork Virtosu Art Gallery Images from Being Copied Here's a great blog article Online

12. The Working Artist

The Working Artist is an art blog read by artists who are currently looking to achieve a breakthrough in their job and career. The site is written by artwork business coach.

Topics include Crista's business tips for artists, entrepreneurship, and success stories from real artists that apply the words of advice of Crista and follow.

Not only do you get to learn from Crista's own special journey by studying The Working Artist blog -- you get to learn from lots of other artists' experiences and see how they changed their careers to become successful artists.

The Working Artist is a blog to follow if you are an artist who is fighting to make the leap and you're ready to begin an art business. So can you, if Crista's done it.

Check out these books from The Working Artist:

□ How To Work With Art Galleries

□ My Top 10 Tips for Art Fair Success

□ The Artist's 6 Stages of Initiation

13. Artwork Archive

Topics include information that both kinds of viewers have something.

The website is home to guides that are exclusive that'll help you realize how to apply for art grants, cost your art, preserve your art. They have other artists how to do your taxes and a guide that'll show you. Seriously, the entire blog is simply filled with actionable and excellent tips you can try out yourself

For business-oriented artists, the Artwork Archive blog is simply too convenient not to visit and bookmark. It's one of the art business. Go visit it sometime (or now).

Check out these publications from Artwork Archive:

□ Seven Rules for Pricing Your Art

□ How to Inventory Your Art

Displate

Displate is an art marketplace on the internet that enables artists to sell their artwork as metal prints -- but we have a blog for artists.

Topics include inspirational photography, home decoration, gaming art in addition to interviews and success stories from independent artists who've turned their hobby.